

Simulation: role description *team leader*¹

You are leading an international project team in the company that recently hired you. You have the feeling that one of the team members has problems with your authority. When you give instructions, your colleague often seems to ignore the information and instead carries out the task in their own way. At present your colleague's role is mainly administrative while you work out which skills this team member has and how they can be used best. You want team members to put forward ideas and suggestions but when you email information about new developments in the project your colleague does not respond. This is an important and pressurized project. It is essential that all team members are motivated and perform to their best ability. Your patience with this team member is gradually running out. You have the authority to drop this colleague from the team but this should be as a last resort.

¹ Adapted version of Barrall & Barrall, 2011, Intelligent Business skills book. Advanced Business English, Pearson, pgs. 9, 90, 93

	Observable situation / event	Interpretations, evaluations, opinions	Feelings, emotions	What is the aim of the meeting? Why does achieving the aim matter?	What is the approach, strategy (how) for the meeting?
Before
	What happened? What was said?	What thoughts crossed your mind during the meeting?	How did you feel during the meeting? And now?	To what extent have you reached (more than, less than) what you aimed for?	To what extent have you followed the prepared strategy?
After					